

Composer Bio

Composer Kevin Joest seeks to explore fundamental truths of the natural, astronomical, and mathematical worlds through his music, and loves creating works based on historical and cutting-edge ideas in both scientific, technological, and artistic fields. However, people are often so interestingly distracting that any abstract concepts with which he begins a work usually end up as analogies to some quirk of human behavior. While he has yet to decide if this is a good thing, he does admit that he enjoys allowing these works to communicate with other humans on a level deeper than normal daily interaction.

Kevin's works have been heard in Europe and South America as well as across the United States. Most recently, his music has been performed by Duo Harpverk in Reykjavik, whose concert was broadcast on Iceland National Radio, on trumpeter Kate Amrine's album This is My Letter to the World, and around the Great Lakes with Juxtatonal in their 2019 Midwestern Tour. More information can be found on his website at kevinjoestmusic.com, and on various social medias.